ABSTRACT

Research has been conducted time and again to evaluate the performance of different kinds of mutual funds. Limited attempts have been made to evaluate the performance of private sector and public sector in the mutual funds sector. This paper tries to evaluate the performance of mutual funds offered by SBI and Reliance. The paper tries to establish which one out of the two is a better form of investment. An effort has been made to measure the fund performance by using Sharpe ratio, the quarterly sample data are collected for the two mutual funds being open-ended growth funds.
